Theodora Jack Oleck

She was little more than a girl, yet already she was experienced in the oldest trade of all. With the incredible power that her lithe body and lightning mind gave her, she would climb from lover to lover, whatever their demands, their perversions, their brutalities, until she reached the summit of Byzantium in its hour of greatest glory and most desperate danger. She was Theodora, daughter of a bearkeeper, slave to men's lusts, who became wife to the conqueror of half the world.
