Unknown 3 Total 25 Of the 25 cases, 20 were in women and 5 in men; 13, or more than one-half the total number, had syphilis. Since 1895 the writer has treated a large number of cases of non-malignant stricture of the rectum. From a careful study of these cases and consideration of the statistics of others, the writer is fully convinced that, although syphilis is not as common a cause of stricture as some writers would imply, it is, nevertheless, a very frequent cause. He is likewise of the opinion that the stenosis may be the result of congenital syphilis, extensive ulcerations from chancres, secondary syphilitic ...
